Soviet Reports Successful Cruise Tests, Renews Vow to Meet U.S. Deployment

By Serge Schmemann

MOSCOW - The Soviet Deense Ministry has announced that it is conducting successful tests of long-range ground-launched cruise les, renewing threats against the United States for what it called that country's widespread deployment of such weapons.

Western diplomats said they were not sure why the Defense Ministry had decided to revive the threat at this time.

A statement issued Saturday by Tass said, "If the United States continues seeking military superi-ority, the Soviet Union will be compelled also in the future to adopt countermeasures to make certain that the balance of forces between the U.S.S.R. and the United States, between the Warsaw treaty nations and NATO, will not be upset."

Soviet leaders and the Soviet press have on several occasions in the past reported testing of longrange cruise missiles, most recently in a Pravda editorial July 31 and in the Moscow weekly Literatureays Gazeta Aug. 8. The Western diplomats said the novelty of Saturday's announcement seemed to be the implication that the Soviet Union had a funcand could begin deploying it. The format of the announcement was similar to those in which Moscow announced countermeasures to North Atlantic Treaty Organization deployments of new medium-range missiles in Western Europe, including new cruise missiles. The diplomats said this could mean that the Russians were treating their cruise missiles as another promised retaliatory measure. When the Prayda editorial was iblished, there was also speculation that Moscow might be reacting to an announcement in Washington in late July that the first longrange cruises, known as Tomahawks, were being deployed on U.S. Navy ships. Saturday's brief statement gave ny's 4.5 million foreign workers, most of them Turks, to induce them to return to their native lands. The program was designed to ease West Germany's 9-percent imemployment rate. In smokestack cities like Duisburg, the jobless rate is 16.5 percent and about 19 percent of the 559,000 people are for eign laborers and their families. For Hüttenheim, five miles (eight kilometers) south of central Duisburg, the exodus means empty houses, abandoned stores and, for some, a future of disappearing jobs and diminished hopes. About 3,000 of the 5,000 or so Turks who lived the Bonn government passed legis-lation offering the equivalent of $3,600 to any foreign worker willing to return home.

Mannesmann, the giant steel company that employed the Turks, sweetened the offer by adding four months' pay and an additional onethird of a month's pay for every year they had worked for the company. The average employee, a so-cial worker said, took about $5,000 back to Turkey.
But the exodus left a scar in the shape of 240 deserted apartments near the heart of Hüttenheim, Mannesmann, which put up the housing early in this century for its workers, says it does not have the money to modernize the units and wants to raze four of the settlement's seven blocks. "If the city says no," said Josef Krings, a Social Democrat and fermer schoolteacher, who is Duis-burg's mayor, "we'll have to buy them. And we just don't have the money.

Duisburg, like other old industrial cities in West Germany, is edging back from the brink of bankruptcy, where it tottered in the late 1970s after the steel giants — Krupp, Mannesmann and Thyssen — began "rationalizing" to cope with Europe's steel crisis.

In Hilttenheim, "rationalizing" has meant shedding 20,000 jobs since 1964. And Thyssen says it foresees the elimination of 8,000

The city, with state and national aid, is buying up old coal-mining and steel-making property and clearing it to install new high-technology industries. Duisburg University recently inaugurated an institute for microelectronics and is helping local companies develop advanced technology products.

The worldwide economic recovery has buoyed the steel industry and enlivened business in Duisburg's huge inland harbor, temporarily halting the spread of unemployment. But Mayor Krings acknowledges that little seeps down to places like Hüttenheim.

Labor-saving equipment contin-ues to eliminate jobs and, with the departure of 5,000-Turks from the Duisburg area, cheap housing is available elsewhere.

Hüttenheim residents, most of them active or retired Mannesmann employees, accuse the company of overcrowding and neglecting the buildings when it filled them with thousands of Turkish laborers at the height of West Germany's labor shortage in the 1960s. Now, they say, with the company's profits depressed by the shimp in demand for steel pipes, the firm's specialty, Mannesmann wants to be rid of the costly project.

Four months ago 30 or so Hüt-tenheim residents—about 20 West Germans and the rest Turks—began planning resistance to demoli-tion. They had help from local lawyers and architects who say the buildings deserve protection.

City and company officials dis-miss their efforts as overly nostalgic. The cost of refurbishing the 240 vacant apartments, they say, would be $18,000 to $28,000 a unit, necessitating vastly increased rents. Whatever the fate of the Hüttenheim settlement, Duisburg officials

More young Americans are letting marriage wait, possibly until they can get a jump on their careers, the Census Bureau reports. Three quarters of the men and more than half the women between 20 and 25 are still single, the bureau says. That compares with 68.8 per-cent of the same age group in 1980 and 54.7 percent in 1970. # Canoeing With Reagan

In his rousing speech accepting the nomina-tion, President Reagan kept coming back to a particular contrast. Four years ago, he said, inflation was high in America and unemployment was rising, but this summer inflation is much lower and the number of jobs is rising. The convention cheered wildly.

Mr. Reagan is making the economy the pivot of his campaign. Let us leave aside for the moment Grenada, the Olympics, the repair of the Statue of Liberty, which party FDR belonged to, which party God belongs to and who thought of women first. For voters, as they contemplate the next four years, there are two central economic questions.

The first is how long the present surge of growth will continue. Perhaps Mr. Reagan really has found a way to break through the old limits, as he argues, and set the American economy on a wholly new course. And then again perhaps he has merely had the good luck to run for re-election in those halcyon few months between the point at which a big deficit begins to generate jobs and the less welcome point at which you begin to see the familiar effect on the inflation rate.

The second question is whether the Reagan method strikes you as fair. His tax cuts mainly helped the people with the most money; his budget cuts mainly hurt the people with the least. For the past generation there had been a fairly durable balance among economic classes in America. Mr. Reagan has tipped it in favor of the wealthy. The distance between the top and the bottom of the income scale is now widening for the first time since the 1920s.

The real magic in the original Reagan program was supposed to be the special design of the tax cuts. They were to provide powerful incentives for saving, investment and production. That was the supply-side formula for years of rapid economic growth without inflation. If the poor lost some of their government benefits, no matter; they would shortly be caught up in the rising stream of prosperity.

Some Republicans argue with bitter conviction that it all will still work. Maybe so. But you have to say that there is no sign of it so far. Nothing has happened in the past four years that cannot be fully explained by the old economics - conventional, familiar and boring as it is. A long and harsh recession early in the Reagan administration brought down the inflation rate. Then a very large and growing budget deficit produced a strong recovery. There is nothing supply-side about that. It is pure Keynesian demand management, on a scale that no previous president had ever dared. As for business investment, savings and consumption, they are all just about where they were four years ago. In Dallas Mr. Reagan was talking about further cuts in the tax rates. If he should win in November, the country might find itself living with huge deficits for quite a while. Is anything wrong with that prospect?

Yes, for several reasons. The deficits are keeping interest rates much too high. They hurt the kind of productive industrial investment that the Reagan program was originally intended to encourage. The high American interest rates are also sucking capital out of poorer countries, and making the stability of the dollar increasingly dependent on foreign investors. Meanwhile, the interest payments on the debt are compounding at a disquieting speed and are rapidly growing in proportion to the budget. Deficits on the present scale are not likely to be consistent with a steadily expanding economy for the next four years.

But most people are not eager to reduce spending much. For all of the talk about getting the budget down, the reality is that nearly everything it buys is popular. Most people are also not eager to come up with enough taxes to pay for it all. Mr. Reagan is telling them, santly and with great assurance, that they don't have to. His position is that things will work out somehow, although he is a bit vague on the details. For the economy, four more years of that would be like riding over Niagara Falls in a canoe — an interesting experience, but one not entirely free of certain risks.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Misuse of Religion

President Reagan's prayer breakfast speech in Dallas was a self-righteous assault on those who disagree with his dangerous, divisive mixing of religion and politics. Not content to debate the merits of difficult issues like school prayer and abortion, he professed to know the hearts and minds of his opponents, and he found them evil. Mr. Reagan has exceeded the bounds of tolerable debate.

He began with the truism that faith and religion figure prominently in U.S. political history. Before he was through he was claiming God for only his side and proclaiming the "real truth" that his adversaries are "intolerant" of religion and care only for the state.

Since his earliest days in politics Mr. Reagan has sought to exploit the fervor of some religious sects. The Reverend Jerry Falwell is only reaping his earthly reward when he is allowed a television pulpit to laud the Republican Party for its commitment "to the liberation of the unborn" and its standard-bearers as "God's instruments in rebuilding America."

But never has Mr. Reagan been so intrusive or so heedless of the rights of others to have their religious and political dissent construed in good faith. Apparently New York's Governor Mario Cuomo may not claim to be relipolitics. Clerics used to be treated deferentially, the president scolded, "and a politician who spoke to or of them with a lack of respect would not long survive in the political arena." Mr. Reagan's speech was a studied misreading of the sense in which "politics and morality are inseparable." The genius of the founding fathers was to keep the debate civilized, and all faiths free, by demanding state neutrality.

There are faiths in America that would brand Mr. Reagan a sinner and bar him from office for failing once to hold a marriage together. As he says, it is their right to hold that conviction. But do they have a right to impose it on every marriage and every faith? So, too, with abortion, and school prayer, and doing business on Sunday, or Saturday, or Friday. Why cannot so distinguished a beneficiary of American tolerance repay other faiths in kind?

The president is right to say that children would learn greater tolerance if they "studied together all the many religions in our country." Indeed, the Supreme Court has welcomed such social study as opposed to government-sponsored prayer in public schools. It hardly follows that if children prayed together - to different deities - they would "understand what they have in common."

What a misguided way for a party leader to keynote an "ecumenical" prayer breakfast. What an odd way to celebrate a campaign of political outreach. What an abuse of high office for a president to so insult the motives of Constitution he is sworn to uphold. This trespass into the moral realm was a blatant attempt to divide Americans. And that, in the civic, secular sense of the word, is a sin.

Political Manipulations in India

Indira Gandhi makes no secret about wanting to see her son Rajiv follow in her footsteps to become prime minister of India, just as she succeeded her father, Pandit Nehru. Nothing wrong with that, of course; but her political manipulations in pursuit of this dynastic dream are now so blatanf that they threaten to tarnish her great country's image as a true democracy. The cynical overthrow of N.T. Rama Rao, the chief minister of Andhra Pradesh, has rightly shocked leaders of opinion in India. This action, which follows previous "topplings" in Kashmir and Sikkim, was plot-ted while the luckless Rama Rao lay upon the operating table for open heart surgery. Mrs. Gandhi denies any complicity, but she is a brilliant behind-the-scenes political operator and her Congress Party has not pulled its punches in the run-up to the general election. The latest move could rebound on Mrs. Gandhi. Mr. Rama Rao has acquired the status of a national figure, and the once divided opposition is rallying behind him. It may be argued that the way India plays its politics is no concern of ours. However, Mrs. Gandhi presumes to speak for more than two-thirds of the population of the Commonwealth and also puts herself forward as a true leader of the developing world. Others are watching to see the political precedents she seeks to create.

- The Observer (London).

Mrs. Gandhi appears to have a double standard in assessing separatist threats at home and abroad. In appeals to Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan, she implored them to put pressure on President Jayewardene so that he will negotiate with the Tamils. Ever quick to win legislate with the Talmis. Even quark to exploit a crisis for electoral gains, Mrs. Gandhi perhaps sees in the Sri Lanka gambit the opportunity to gain support in Tamil Nadu the same way she won back massive Hindu support after the Golden Temple exercise.

Reagan Is a Useful Bogeyman

MOSCOW — Imagine a child running into its parents' bedroom in the middle of the night shouting about a bogeyman with long teeth and fingernails that he has just seen, presumably in his dreams. Then imagine looking up and actually seeing that bogeyman walk into the bedroom. Something like this has happened to the Russians.

Instead of a bogeyman, the Russians have Ronald Reagan. President Reagan is the imperialist devil that Soviet propagandists have always warned the Russians about, now come to life in the White House. When I lived here 10 years ago, in the era of detente, that devil was depersonalized - indeed, he lost all man characteristics. The real-life imperialists (Western leaders) then on the world scene enjoyed reasonably good reputations in Moscow. They were described in neutral or friendly terms in the Soviet press.

For example, in Pravda on Aug. 11, 1974, the bad guys were referred to only as "certain circles" in the United States that did not join in the "very wide public support" in America for Soviet-American détente. The good guys of those days included the president of the Bank of America, the new president of the United States, Gerald Ford, and his secretary of state, Henry Kissinger. All were to be regarded as supporters of détente with the Soviet Union, Pravda instructed its readers 10 years ago. But in Pravda this past week, no

Western leaders were descibed in favorable terms, and there was no need for vague references to inimical "circles" in the West. Why be circum-spect when "R. Reagan" and his ad-ministration can be cited by name? And plenty of citations there were!

Every day since he cracked it, Pravda and the other Soviet papers have carried articles on Mr. Reagan's joke" about outlawing Russia and beginning the bombing in five min-utes. "I think we should continue with it," one Soviet official said of this propaganda barrage.

Clearly, Mr. Reagan's quip gave Soviet propagandists a windfall they could not resist — "proof" that he was indeed the very monster they had a great favor for our propagandists, another Soviet official observed, and "someone ought to thank him."

Americans have never been good at imagining how their words sound to others, particularly Russians. We expect the world to understand what we say the way we understand it.
The Soviet leadership, nonetheless.

has a problem in its own domestic propaganda. It asks the people to understand the zigs and zags of the party line and of world events just the way the leadership wants them un-derstood at a particular moment. The result can be truly Orwellian: One day Oceania is the enemy, the next day Oceania is a close ally, just as it was in the book "1984."

Ten years ago, detente — what the Russians called "the relaxation of international tensions" — was described here as a fundamental change in world politics, a permanent change that marked the Soviet Union's arrival as a genuine superpower. Pravda commented in August 1974: "The process of international relaxation is first of all the result of objective conditions, the changing correlation of forces in the world in favor of socialism, peace and social progress." In other words, according to Pravda, we are so much stronger now that the imperialists have to be nice to us.

That analysis contained a deep pitfall, and the leadership has now fallen into it. If detente was a reflection of the increased strength of the Soviet camp, then doesn't the subsequent and, as it looks in retrospect, speedy —demise of detente indicate that the "correlation of forces" has shifted again, abruptly to the disadvantage of the Soviet Union?

Either that is the case or the leadership's original explanation of détente was incorrect. Either way, Soviet citizens have grounds for wondering what their leaders did wrong.

The leaders must understand this. Their behavior sggests that they do. They are reverting to old instructs, pulling the wagons into a circle, de-liberately scaring the populace.

The Washington Post.

Soviet propagandists a windfall they could not resist — "proof" that he was indeed the very monster they had been describing to their readers for more than three years. "He has done the province of the Soviet Union and declare a "Soviet threat." The figure's right arm, labeled "provocation," represents a snake whose tongue spells "CIA."

A Russian Tells the West Arms Control Is Possible

By Spartak Beglov The writer is professor of foreign relations at Moscow State Institute and a political analyst for the Soviet press agency Novosti.

viet Union had enough self-control to survive President Reagan's "nuclear joke" that he was outlawing Russia forever and preparing to bomb it in the next five minutes.

The remark did, nevertheless, give us and the rest of the world yet another opportunity to see the extent to which the Reagan administration is guided by subliminal instincts in foreign affairs. It has also strengthened our determination to do even more to erect insurmountable obstacles to "thinking the unthinkable."

But there is nothing new in this. Prevention has always been at the core of our positions on disarmament and the war-and-peace issue. All the more than 130 arms control proposals and initiatives that the Soviet Union has put forward since World War II have been based on the same principle - that we must not neglect a single measure, no matter how limited, that can curb the arms race or lessen the risk of nuclear war. Our long-term goal, today as always, is general and complete disarmament.

More specifically, we aim to close the channels for the production and deployment of new types of weapons, to resume real arms reductions of the kind outlined by the first and second SALT treaties and to implement such political measures as can help prevent the outbreak of a nuclear war.

We have not stinted in our efforts to stop the race in nuclear arms production. The Soviet Union has ex-pressed its official position in favor of an immediate freeze of nuclear arsenals and has buttressed that declaration by corresponding proposals made in talks with the United States and in the United Nations in 1982. We have made consistent efforts to impose moratoriums on the deployment of specific types of weapons. The case in point at the moment is of course anti-satellite systems - but our proposal is unlikely to come to much, because the United States is

MOSCOW—As a Russian, I can apparently determined to test its space weapons as part of its plan for the militarization of space. Finally, we are undeviating in our hope for an overall ban on nuclear weapons tests. This, too, was blocked by America, when it walked out of talks with Britain and the Soviet Union in 1980 and when it refused to ratify agreements in 1974 and 1976 on limiting underground tests. Our commitment to arms reductions is also amply clear. We believe that the best and most realistic reductions are those we proposed last year in Geneva. This agreement would take account of the structure of each side's arsenal and would produce a 25-percent reduction on both sides. As for political measures, in 1982 the Soviet Union took the unilateral step - we hoped America would follow our example — of pledging never to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

> The Soviet Union and the United States can take steps to give mankind a guarantee against nuclear war.

We have also suggested an international code of conduct for the prevention of nuclear war: It calls for a general pledge of no first use, accompanied by a freeze and by measures to toughen nonproliferation agreements, particularly those that apply to the militarization of space. What has impeded the implementation of these goals? The short answer is the absence of reciprocity the U.S. reluctance to accept a few basic principles of disarmament.

The first and most basic is the rinciple of parity and equal security. it calls for equality and respect for the security interests of the other side. Without this, it is impossible to hold a serious dialogue on disarmament.

In fact, however, all of Washington's strategic doctrines give priority to the task of surpassing the Soviet Union. Americans constantly forget that the Soviet nuclear buildup has invariably been in reaction to U.S. escalation. Since the war, we have been catching up - with American A-bombs, intercontinental missiles, nuclear-powered submarines, multiple warheads and cruise missiles. In Europe we only began to deploy SS-20 missiles after NATO decided in 1979 to modernize its nuclear arsenal.

The second principle is that politics is the art of the possible and diplomacy is an instrument of rational adjustment of mutual interests with a view to reaching a mutually acceptable compromise. The current arms control deadlocks - would that they be merely pauses - are clearly caused by the Reagan administration's rejection of this principle. In our view, Washington is committed to the politics of confrontation particularly the creation of patently unacceptable faits accomplis.

negotiated agreements, we believe that the Soviet Union and the United States, and East and West in general, can take steps to give mankind a guarantee against a nuclear war.

Three measures come to mind: a

WASHINGTON — It was an andacious assistance planning and more developmental impact. With an assured supply over a predeter-By Robert J. McCloskey

W challenge — "that within a decade no child will go to bed hungry" — put by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to the World Food Council 10 years ago, in the aftermath of severe famine in the Sahel and Bangladesh. For reasons that might be debated interminably, the agenda of 1974 went unfulfilled. Today we confront a situation that is both desperate and perverse: desperate because more than 100 million people face starvation; perverse because, we are told, there is a world food supply sufficient to feed everyone on Earth. The numbers going to bed hungry have multiplied, as we see most graphically in Africa.

The assessment that there is enough food to feed all the hungry implies the best of possible worlds. The real world, with its projections for huge population increases continu next century, is what must be faced.

There can be no serious magnitude of need in Africa today. The World Food Program estimates a shortfall of 1.3 million metric tons of food, which will affect the lives of 150 million men, women and children in the sub-Saharan region. And the problem goes beyond food. Famine and malnutrition give way to diar-rhea, dysentery, measles, meningitis and malaria, which become epidemic as people crowd together in search of sustenance.

The massive strain that these conditions put on existing health services requires that outreach projects in public health be integrated into assistance programs. In addition, recuperation cen-ters need to be established for the treatment of marasmus and kwashiorkor, the most serious caloric and protein deficiencies among children. For the coming months, the greatest needs will be in eastern, central and southern Africa, with The writer, a former State Department official, is a senior vice president of Catholic Relief Services.

the most severe conditions continuing to affect Ethiopia and Mozambique. Deteriorating situa-tions are spreading famine in Kenya, Lesotho, Zimbabwe and Tanzania. Inadequate rainfall afflicts Somalia, Rwanda, Burundi and parts of Kenya and Tanzania. Elsewhere in Kenya the rains arrived too late to affect harvests.

The African crisis did not surface this year or last. It has been growing throughout the decade, and it will be there for years to come. If it is to be met, if the poor and hungry are to be permitted to rise above their ordeals — brought about by natural disaster, refugee flight, shifting priorities of donors, political decisions that too often override humanitarian concerns - governments will

Earlier this year the U.S. government provided for $150 million in emergency food aid. This was an encouraging action, but we must go on. For 1985 at least an additional $225 million in commodities and dollar assistance to meet inland transportation and distribution costs will be needed worldwide, mostly in Africa. Catholic Relief Services is currently distributing 90 percent of the food available to private agencies there. We could handle significantly more, provided the time required for approval, shipment and funding support is markedly tightened.

Donor countries must take a longer look. Effective planning that results in basic changes requires a sound strategy and reliable access to resources over an extended period.

We and others believe that increased use of "block grants" would lead to more efficient food-mined time, commodities can be used as part of a comprehensive program designed to achieve both short- and long-term objectives more effectively than the current year-to-year programs.

There are valid concerns that feeding programs may exacerbate the problem they try to solve, by creating dependency and weakening production incentives. That is why we and others involved in such programs believe that they must be designed to produce change, addressing not only the presence of hunger but its causes as well. To this end, the strategy of Catholic Relief Services in Africa and elsewhere is directed toward income self-sufficiency and food security for the family unit, in the belief that it represents the most cohesive force in any society. That force has persisted where governments have failed.

Immediate relief is only part of the equation. Few people in Africa or anywhere eise want to live by handouts; most want to be able to provide for themselves and their families. It is a matter of simple human dignity. If the countries of Africa are to escape the bondage of famine, they must develop the capacity to feed themselves. To comprehend Africa's reality is to demand magnanimity from advantaged governments. Political suspicion or bureaucratic inertia cannot be tolerated as excuses not to act resolutely.

The willingness of developed countries to act with significant infusions of food and technical aid will have to be matched — as was earlier the case in Asia — by firm commitments on the part of African governments to more enlightened political and economic policies. To pass through the barriers to more productive futures, donor and recipient will have to go arm in arm.

If Your Remark Is News It Isn't Off the Record

By Sam Zagoria

The writer is ombudsman at The Washington Post.

— words in Washington are "off the record." They can damage further U.S. Soviet relations and revive the old disquiet of allies, as President Reagan learned, or they can rub sand in candidate-reporter relations, as vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro has found out.

President Reagan thought he was only making an "off-the-record" crack when he talked about bombing Russia. Unfortunately for him, the joke was spoken into a live microphone and tape recorder, and it turned into a major event.

To him it was a joke. To Western Europe and to Russia it was the leader of the Western world talking casually about nuking another superpower into atomic particles. Said Sir James Eberle, director of the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London: "One wishes to God — and I think this goes for most Europeans — that it hadn't hap-pened. For most people it wasn't in pened. For most people it wasn t in itself a gaffe of huge proportions. But it reinforced the cancature of Reagan that many people have built up." Suppose Soviet President Kon-stantin Chernenko had joked about bombing the United States? Murrey Marder, a reporter for more than 40 years and a Washington Post diplomatic correspondent in Washington and abroad for many of those, predicted that the incident would, like Nikita Khroshchev's "We will bury you," outlive many more thoughtful U.S. policy statements. "The one-liners are the ones that zing

WASHINGTON — Among the three most used — and abused — words in Washington are "off the listeners when they speak, overlooking the fact that such words circle the world and do affect international re-lations. "A president has to choose his words carefully," be added.

I think there is much too much use of "off the record" in public life. I believe it is often an intellectually dishonest device because most of the time the person using it is, at best, hoping to make a few goodwill points with a reporter or, at worst, is plant-ing an idea in the expectation that it will somehow filter into the public dialogue, and if it proves inaccurate the source will have no responsibility.

"Off the record" is a security blanket, a mark of cronyism between news reporter and news source, and it tends to violate the line separating the functions of both. "Off the remake a slip; it encourages reporters said was grist for reporting to offer advice to campaigners. It inflates the egos; it deflates integrity.

Professional reporters are in going "off the record"; the There are a few exceptions when it is warranted, but very few.

Washington Post columnist Hobart Rowen recalls President Johnson chiding a reporter for her failure to report a story he had told her. She replied, "But you told me it was off the record." Mr. Johnson responded emphatically, "But that didn't mean you couldn't write about it."

U.S. presidential politics this year has brought the Reverend Jesse Jackson and Representative Geraldine Ferraro from relative obscurity into into history," he said.

friends led the candidates to forget cord" encourages a coziness so that some politicians begin to expect reporters to "protect" them when they and anything and everything they Professional reporters are sparing in going "off the record"; they don't volunteer it; they insist on a specific request and specific acknowledgment before it is honored. But not all re-porters work this way. I have seen a reporter volunteer to go "off the re-cord" with an official when the official was eager to be quoted in print. The media dig and dig into records and sources for hidden information about candidates, but unless they are willing to forgo "off-the-record" confidences they may overlook the most telling insights of a candidate's real feelings and personality. If the question is worth asking, it is worth get-

Why do we have to see front-page articles for two weeks about an off-the-record joke that never should have been published in the first place? The journalists who reported this radio test to the whole world committed as serious an error as Mr. Reagan himself in uttering it.

GARY METZGER Clermont-Ferrand, France.

In his opinion column "A Warning: Reagan Is Over the Hill" (Aug. 20), John B. Oakes does his best to insult the man who has stopped Soviet expansionism and made America strong. President Reagan did not say that the only good Russian is a dead

BEN LANE. Sollentuna, Sweden,

When Soviet leaders declare that they will "bury" the West, they are not joking. Perhaps Mr. Reagan was not joking, either; in any case he expressed the ardent wish of the world's freedom-loving people for an end to the Gulag. He should gain, not lose, votes as a result.

G.R. HASTINGS.

Michael Harbottle (Letters, Aug. 17), deploring President Reagan's homb-Russia joke, is typical of those who are easily outraged by American deeds and words but ignore what the Russians do and say. The announcement a few months ago that Soviet submarines would be moved closer to America's shores so as to reduce missile-totarget flight time seems to me to be a threat far more serious than Mr. Reagan's off-the-air joke. EGILS ZILE.

Singapore.

Let the unanimous chorus that has risen to chant its anxiety about Mr. Reagan's utterance take heed. When at an early hour Winston Churchill repeatedly urged the Western democracies to take a firm stand against the empire of evil that was then threatening civilization, his good countrymen were eager to echo the "decent German" Hitler in denouncing Churchill as a dangerous warmonger.

True, Americans probably do have a safer option of withdrawing in splendid isolation and abandoning the rest of us. I therefore appland idealists like Ronald Reagan whose hearts bleed for those victimized by both black and red fascism. The danger does not lie with these uncompromising opponents of tyranny, but with the dreamers who are lured by visions of cheap letente or "peace for our time."

We have seen a news item in your newspaper stating that the Indian prime minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, had accused a Washingtonbased agency of involvement in the Sikh extremist movement. We would like to clarify that Mrs. Gandhi has categorically denied that she had cited American involvement in this context. She was only reiterating what she had often statmovements have their origin and support from abroad. Regarding "The Germanys: Try-ing Reunification on the Sly" (Aug. 14) by William Safire:

As an admirer of American political journalism. I was amazed by this emotional article. William Salire should re-examine his preconeived and pre-1945 ideas about Germany and look into reality beore writing statements that will mislead readers and other medianakers as well.

For the vast majority of West Germany's younger generation (the rulk of today's population), East Germany is a distant country. We grew up, studied and spent our vaations in an open West European group of countries. Those who play with the illusion of trading this for so-called common national idenity together with a German-speakng territory that has become so lifferent are a small minority with heir minds in the past, like (in the apposite direction) the separatists n Spain or France.

A policy that tries to make the order between the Germanys a ittle bit more like a normal border, f this is possible on the division ine between East and West, has as ittle to do with reunification as conomic agreements with Austria save to do with a hypothetical polcy toward a new "Anschluss."

The Logic of Cold War

The editorial "Forgery as Foreign Policy" (Aug. 10) demonstrates how far the New Cold War has gone to embrace the press, just as the Cold War before it nearly eliminated independent press opinion for many years. How is it that the assertions of an FBI director and an attorney gen-eral in the Reagan administration amount to a "convincing" case that the KGB forged and sent racist letters to various African and Asian Olympic committees?

Recall that the FBI has a poor record for telling the truth, having lied repeatedly to the public about domestic spying. Recall, also, that the current administration has re-peatedly issued filmsy and obviously trumped up documents and statements about such things as the mining of Nicaragua's harbors, the purposes of the famous airport runway in Grenada, and Soviet in-volvement in Central America. And terrorism? The Soviets hardly have a monopoly on it: The CIÁ toppled the governments of Guate-mala (1954) and Chile (1973) and is now engaging in terrorism in Hon-duras, against Nicaragna. We do not have any monopoly on virtue. Ultimately, the editorial reads like any Tass diatribe against America: The entire case is made by a prior condemnation of anyhing the Soviets do ("Tass, which has abundant reason to cover up"). It pardons U.S. officials for refusing to provide proof to the public. Sounds like the Kremlin, huh?

GORDON GASKILL

We welcome the editorial comment "A Moratorium for Whales" (Aug. 20), and particularly its conclusion that Japan should accept the moratorium on commercial whaling, which takes effect in 1986.

It is not correct, however, to portray this decision as a "shock for a country that depends on the seas for its protein." Whale meat contributes less than one-tenth of 1 percent to Japan's protein con-sumption, and the International Whaling Commission decisions per se have no bearing on Japan's other, non-whale fisheries.

Also, the editorial overlooks im-portant scientific aspects of the IWC's moratorium decision. Recent work within the commission's scientific committee has revealed the extreme inadequacies of the science underlying the commission's management efforts. It has been found, for example, that a popula-tion decline cannot be detected for years, even if it is serious. Methods of assesing fish resources are not applicable because of the vast differences in rates and patterns of reproduction and natural mortality: A whale has one calf every two years at most, whereas one famale fish lays millions of eggs every year. In 1982, when the moratorium decision was adopted, the scientific committee found for the first time that it could not make a recommendation against a moratorium. It was the above findings that resulted in the decision to adopt a moratorum, not simply the recent involvement of new, conservationminded members of the IWC, as your editorial implies. It must be pointed out that among the countries which swelled the reports turned out to be meta the membership of the IWC were residues of ships." Japan's client whaling states, such as Peru and Chile, which were brought in to "legitimize" their trade in whale meat and to give Japan a supporting bloc of votes. Japan has not willingly accepted smaller quotes in expectation that some whaling can continue; it has fought them bitterly. Its fleet has been reduced because whale populations have been reduced, often to the point that it is no longer profitable to go out and hunt it Many countries, including the United States, were involved in the massive commercial exploitation and subsequent depletion of the great whales earlier this century. Most of these have now stopped and have embraced responsible conservationist policies in an attempt to correct past excesses. The cease-fire line is quiet and that is the way the Israeli and Jordanian commanders want it. Once in a while something does happen - last month two rockets came crashing into Israeli territory - but such drama is an exception.

"We have no problem with Jordan," a high Israeli officer said. "When the rockets came in we knew what happened," he added, implying that Syrian guerrillas had evaded Jordanian patrols to lire across the river.

At the Allenby Bridge, which was crossed last year by more than a million West Bank residents, visitors and tourists, the Jordanian and Israeli commanders cooperate easily from opposite ends of the small steel span. Technically, Israel and Jordan

U.S. Is Said to Ask Israel For an Austerity Plan In Exchange for Aid

By Don Oberdorfer

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Reagan administration officials have begun extensive studies and informal diplomatic discussions on new largescale aid for Israel's economy. But sources say the officials have informed Israel that a credible and comprehensive economic reform plan must be presented in order to qualify.

The Washington activity, under the personal supervision of Secre-tary of State George P. Shultz, became known as a report from Jerusalem suggested that Israel might ask for $700 million in emergency economic aid as soon as a new government is formed.

Gad Yaacobi, who is expected to become finance minister if the Labor Party is successful in forming a government, was quoted as saying he envisioned asking for a $700million emergency grant in addition to the $2.6 billion that the Jewish state is expected to receive in fiscal year 1985.

Mr. Yaacobi is planning to try to cut the current $20-billion Israeli budget by $1.3 billion to $1.5 billion and to reduce price-indexed wage increases to qualify for the U.S. aid, according to a report in The Wall Street Journal.

A separate report from Jerusalem by The Associated Press quoted a Finance Ministry official as saying Israel would ask the Unitand vehicles are modified to speed ed States to deliver its entire 1985 inspection: upholstery and side eneconomic aid package in October to shore up its foreign exchange

Over the past three weeks, four zeros with a total redemption value of $1.9 billion have hit the Eurobond market. In addition, a group led by Salomon Brothers Inc. this month offered hybrid securities that are in effect zero-coupon U.S. Treasury bonds. The savings for the borrower can be huge. For instance, Nordic Investment Bank would have had to pay interest of around 1314 percent for a straight 10-year Eurobond, one banker estimated. Instead, it offered a zero-coupon bond and swapped into floating-rate money costing less than the six-month London interbank offered rate, or Libor, which stood Friday at about 121/2 percent. Dealers say that arranging a swap with a zero--coupon issue is notoriously difficult. Morgan Guaranty, naturallv. would discuss neither its secret formula nor the anonymous counterparty or parties in the transaction.

For tax and regulatory reasons, zeros appeal especially to Japanese and French investors. They also suit investors that want to lock themselves into a high yield. With a straight bond, the investor must worry that interest rates will decline, forcing him to reinvest his interest payments at a lower rate. Since zeros pay no interest, the investor is spared that uncertainty.

'EROS also appeal to those who want to bet on a major bond rally by putting down a relatively small payment, and speculators are drawn by the rapid price swings common in the zero-coupon market.

The catch is that the new zeros are yielding around 0.75 percentage point less than top-quality straight Eurodollar bonds. Given the flood of new zeros, last week's two new 10-year issues held up reasonably well. Nordic's issue was trading late Friday at around 30.65, for a yield of about 12.60 percent. Electricité de France's issue was about 31.10, for a yield of 12.45

Meanwhile, the 10-year Swedish Export Credit zero launched earlier this month was yielding about 12.47 percent based on Friday's price, while the 20-year Asian Development Bank issue traded at a yield of about 12.30 percent.

New straight bond issues remained scarce. Part of the reason is that lawyers are still trying to figure out how new U.S. regulations (Continued on Page 9, Col. 4)

Insurance For FCA Weighed

U.S. Seeks to Stop Outflow of Funds

> By Bill Sing and Tom Furlong

Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES — U.S. regula-LOS ANGELES — U.S. regula-tors, stepping up efforts to monitor Financial Corp. of America and its American Savings & Loan Associa-tion unit, have discussed the possi-bility of insuring all deposits at the troubled S&L to stop an outflow of funds, sources close to regulators

The federal regulators also have asked at least three persons if they are interested in becoming chief executive of Los Angeles-based FCA to replace the current chief, Charles W. Knapp, the sources said

These regulators, who believe that Mr. Knapp's aggressive growth strategy has been largely responsible for FCA's recent financial problems, are said to be explor-ing the idea of removing him if FCA's financial condition deterio-

The sources would not identify the individuals asked about suc-ceeding Mr. Knapp, but leading candidates are believed to be William Popejoy, former chairman of Financial Federation, and Anthony Frank, chairman of First Nationwide Savings.

The chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Edwin Gray, also has told senior staff members to cancel late-August vacation plans, one former regulator said. "I would imagine Gray has the entire agency mobilized over this single issue," the former regu-lator said. Mr. Gray could not be reached for comment.

The informal discussion of a blanket deposit guarantee comes amid continuing concern about whether institutional depositors with funds exceeding the $100,000 limit on denosit insurance will keep their funds at American, which is based in Stockton, California. American is the nation's largest

Any deposit guarantee presum-ably would be similar to one used by banking regulators in May at Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. Such a guarantee, by protecting all of American's deposits exceeding $100,000, would help to stop an outflow of these uninmore than half of American's $25 billion in deposits as of June 30.

American acknowledged that it lost $1.4 billion in institutional funds in July, although that it said the loss was partially offset by an increase in retail deposits.

The Bond Buyer, a New Yorkbased trade publication, said in a report Friday that a survey con-ducted earlier this week of 38 large California municipalities with certificates of deposit as large as $30 million at American showed that 35 have decided to pull out their funds once their accounts mature.

GM, Toyota Unit Fosters New Spirit

New York Times Service

FREMONT, California - Roscoe Dye, 47, an autoworker, spent part of his day recently trying to assemble a truck. He was not working with steel, but with building blocks from a children's toy

It was one of many tests Mr. Dye had to pass in a four-day screening process before he was hired by Nummi, which is more formally known as New United Motor Manufacturing Inc., the company born of the General Motors and Toyota joint

In the Lego exercise, one person tells another how to assemble a truck, but the instructor is not allowed to use his hands, D. William Childs, Nummi's general manager of human resources, exed. The purpose is to see how well applicants work together, to measure their creativity and to evaluate their leadership abilities.

For Mr. Dye, the game was the most interesting part of the application process. But there was some bitterness in having to go through the process at

"When you're an employee at one plant and you go into the same building for 21 years," he said, "it's a little disappointing that they had you go through this assessment to be rehired at the same building. But they convince you it's a new company, and so you have to go through this to get

In any case, the sweet seems to far outweigh the bitter, now that the company is finally hiring at the former GM plant here, which was closed two and a half years ago. Indeed, as new employees prepare the plant for the production expected to begin in December, it is almost impossible to find a trace of dissatisfaction. For Mr. Dye, who spent 21 years as a maintenance worker and employee trainer on the line, any change is for the better.

"Upper management treated you as a lower grade of people," he said of his former employers.

"If you didn't have the education to communicate with those people, they wouldn't bring themselves to talk to you

"But we found that the upper management is now willing to talk to a common working person like myself," he continued.

The closing of the GM plant left behind 2,500 tnemployed autoworkers and a history of angry confrontations between supervisors and employees, the union and the company.

Now both sides are trying to put that history behind them. At stake is the reputation of the unionized U.S. autoworker and GM itself whether U.S. workers and managers can match the Japanese in productivity and quality.

"Both sides have something to gain here, and both have something to lose," said Robert W. Hendry, a Nummi general manager.

"The union can show the world they can do it with American labor," and GM can show that the U.S. auto industry can still produce quality cars. By most accounts, it took a great deal of time and effort to convince the Japanese that the job could be done by members of the United autoworkers union, and to convince the UAW to relax some of its work rules, a move justified by the company's determination to change.

William Usery, secretary of labor under President Gerald R. Ford and a senior consultant on labor relations to the new venture, said the Japanese at first did not want to use union workers. There was a perception of lack of discipline, drugs, absentecism, at times even some sabotage," he said. "It would strike fear if you're going to try to come to America to build a quality car. I had to convince the Japanese that not only should they not get upset with the UAW, but that they should

AT&T to Cut 11,000 Jobs By Next Year

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - American Telephone & Telegraph Co. has an-nounced that it will eliminate 11,000 management and blue-col-lar jobs in the United States by early next year as part of its con-tinuing effort to control costs.

The cuts, rumored for weeks, reflect the continuing difficulty that AT&T is having in adapting to the competitive telecommunications environment since the Bell System breakup on Jan. 1.

AT&T has routinely laid off manufacturing employees tempo-rarily during economic downturus, but the new cutbacks would be the first of their kind in modern times at the company, where lifelong em-ployment has been commonplace.

The company, which reported earnings well below its earlier projections for its first year without the local Bell operating companies, has been struggling for most of the year to bring its high costs under con-trol. It has already frozen wages for 114,000 management-level employ-ees, announced the closing of four plants and cut 5,000 workers from ment programs. AT&T employs 373,000 people nationwide. Officials at AT&T said Friday that the cuts would be concentrated in the 53,000-employee equipment maintenance and service operations of AT&T Technologies, the unregulated AT&T subsidiary spearheading the parent's push into its payrolls through attrition, resig-

The company will try to transfer employees or seek voluntary retire-ments, he added. But sources said wide-scale layoffs are likely. Departing employees, however, will be given severance packages patterned after the early retirement incentive programs still being of-fered in some parts of AT&T, the sources said.

"The people who will be asked to leave will get a very nice package," said one manager who left AT&T recently and who had been in coatact with former associates Friday.

AT&T Technologies, which consists largely of AT&T's old Western Electric operation, employs about two-thirds of AT&T's work force. But it generates less than half of the parent company's revenues and is barely profitable.

Mr. Olson said in June that

AT&T Technologies intended to reduce expenses by 20 percent to 25 percent by the end of the year. At the time, he did not specify where the reductions would be made, but he told managers that layoffs had not been ruled out,

MILAN — The future of Zanussi, Italy's leading home appliance producer and one of its greatest postwar industrial success stories, now lies in the bands of its foreign creditors, haggling over the terms of a rescue bid.

The Italian banks that are owed most of Zanussi's 1.05 trillion lire ($590 million) of debts have accepted proposals from Electrolux of Sweden to buy a 49-percent stake. # Peru Starts Repaying Its Soviet Debt SEC Charges In Unusual $1-Billion Barter Accord Hawaii Firm

By Michael L. Smith

Washington Post Service
LIMA — Peru has started paying back a $1-billion debt to the Soviet Union and other Socialistbloc countries through an unusual barter arrangement.

goods, mainly textiles, and some commodities in the transaction.

Peruvian finance officials have praised the Soviet trade agreement as a creative approach to the Latin American debt crisis, while Peruvian businessmen have embraced it enthusiastically as a godsend as de-veloped countries have enacted protectionist measures.

"We have to make an all-out effort to put the deal into full gear," said Edward Holme, chairman of Peru's textile-manufacturers' association, Comite Textil de la Sociedad Nacional de Industrias. "Peru has to seek a trade opening with the Soviet Union in the face of the American conduct" in limiting textile imports, he said.

The administration of President Fernando Belaunde Terry has been the most pro-American govern-ment in South America since 1980, although this ideological stance has been dampened recently by the per and textiles and the cancella-tion of a bilateral air treaty.

The idea of a Soviet-Peru debtbarter agreement originated in centrally planned economy and the mid-1983 when Peruvian finance officials half-heartedly suggested cording to Peruvian exporters.

Soviet delegates have inspect during the fourth debt negotiation since 1977.

The barter arrangement calls for the Soviets to make purchases in Peru from an established list of Three-quarters of the volume must be in manufactured goods, and the rest may be in commodities such as metals, fish meal and coffee, which the Soviet Union has regularly purchased from Peru over the past decade.

Finance sources say that the limit on commodity sales was to avoid committing products that could readily be sold for hard cash.

So far, Peru has signed contracts for delivery of $12 million in goods, 90 percent of which are textiles, although export officials expect to have contracts worth $40 million by year-end.

"This is essentially a trial peri-od," Mr. Holme said. Although the contracts are esbetween private companies and So-viet export-import firms, the agree-ment combines the caution of a

With Fraud

By Kenneth B. Noble
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The head of Hawaiian investment company, who contends that his firm was financed by the Central Intelli-gence Agency, has been accused by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission of engaging in a wide-ranging securities fraud.

The SEC charges, filed Friday, alleged that Ronald Rewald and the now-defunct firm he founded, Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dilingham & Wong Inc., violated federal securities laws by making false and misleading statements to in-vestors about Mr. Rewald and how

Mr. Rewald's lawyer, Melvin Belli, could not be reached for com-ment at his San Francisco office. In the past, Mr. Rewald has defended his actions by saying he was acting for the CIA.

Parallel investigations are being conducted by the state of Hawaii, the U.S. Justice Department, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the House Energy and Commerce Committee. The inquiries all grow out of the collapse last year of the Bishop firm, which resulted in losses for several hundred inves-

So far Mr. Rewald has settled one action against him, for securities fraud. It was brought a year ago by the SEC. He did not admit or deny the allegations, but agreed to refrain from further violations of the federal securities laws. SEC officials said they hoped the administrative proceeding would bring about a lifetime ban of Mr. Rewald from the securities industry. The investigation by Hawaii, on charges of theft by deception, could result in his imprisonment.

In court documents presented in the firm's bankruptcy proceeding, Mr. Rewald asserted that he was "a covert agent of the CIA" and a conduit for financing foreign oper-

Kathy Pherson, a spokeswoman for the CIA, declined to answer questions regarding the case. "We do not comment on cases under litigation," she said.

But Thomas Haves, a court-ao pointed bankruptcy administrator in charge of the liquidation, said in a telephone interview: "The CIA was involved here, and I know probably better than anyone." The irm, he said, "provided commercial cover for one or more agents."

Mr. Hayes described Bishop. Baldwin as "a classic Ponzi scheme." A Ponzi scheme is a term for a fraudulent operation in which investors are paid with funds raised from other investors.

The scheme began in 1978, ac cording to court documents, when Mr. Rewald, founded Bishop by borrowing the names of three of Hawaii's old-line monied families, Bishop, Baldwin and Dillingham. He then advertised that the firm had a 40-year history of distin-

THE NEW AMERICAN POVERTY

By Michael Harrington. 271 pp. $17.95. Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 521 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10175.

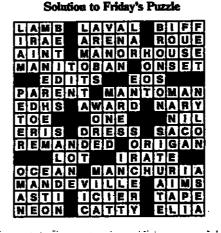

Reviewed by Thomas B. Edsall

WENTY-TWO years ago, Michael Har-I rington changed the face of American polities and of U. S. public policy. His book, "The Other America," appearing in 1962, joited both the president, John F. Kennedy, and a complacent nation into a recognition of the fact that even at the height of American pros-perity, over a fifth of the population of the country was dirt poor. In the decade that followed. Congress enacted legislation providing funds for the poverty program, food stamps, indexed Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid, thereby substantially lowering the rate of poverty, alleviating hunger, providing medical care to many of the aged and indigent.

Now, after two decades and 10 books, Harrington has attempted to reassess the state of poverty in America. In "The New American Poverty," Harrington raises a basic political and social question: how does a democratic country that is part market system and part welfare state achieve equity, productivity and economic efficiency? This, in fact, may not be a question, but, rather, a rough description of a fundamental political tension within the American system.

The poor, in many respects, have constituted a political Achilles heel for both the Democratic and Republican parties. The hesitant commitment of the Democratic Party to programs animent of the Democratic Party to programs targeted toward the poor became a major liability during the 1970s, when the failure of the economy to grow allowed Republicans to charge that government under the Democratic Party was helping only those at the very bottom of the ladder, and not those on the second and third gives on the working and lower. and third rungs — the working and lower-middle classes, key Democratic constituencies. Conversely, the budget and tax cuts enacted under the Reagan administration have helped to revive the public perception of the Republican Party as the party of the rich.

The relative ease with which those budget cuts were enacted by a Congress with a Democratic majority in the House was a demonstra-tion of the declining political power of the poor. This decline has coincided with a steady crosion of voter turnout levels among those in the bottom third of the income distribution, and it has also coincided with some basic changes in the demographics of poverty during the past 25 years. Changes in the demographics of poverty have significant political consequences, lusofar as the population of the poor does not mirror, in general terms, the entire population, it becomes increasingly difficult to maintain political support for income-transfer programs benefitting the poor.

In the continuing national debate over poverty, a central virtue of Harrington's book is that it confronts issues that have been plaguing both the ideological right and left. Who are the poor and what justification is there for acceptance of continuing high unemployment levels?
What happened to the political balance of power between the 1960s and 1980s? Why, when the civil rights movement achieved its greatest momentum and the poverty program began, did the United States's crime rate shoot up? Do government statistics overestimate the number of poor, as conservatives argue, or do they fail to include many whose day-to-day needs for food, clothing and shelter are unmei, as many advocates of the poor argue?

Ultimately, the way in which government deals with the poor — and with every income group, for that matter — is determined in large part by power. A key element of power in a democracy is the ability to make a strong argument. It is for this reason that the conserative movement has been financing such institutions as the Heritage Foundation, the American Enterprise Institute and the Hoover Institution: to provide a strong, intellectual base for the ideological right. Harrington, who represents the ideological left, wrote "The New American Poverty" in part as an answer to conservative arguments; he has not, however, strengthened the case of the left. Although the book raises a number of core issues, Harrington's analyses are less substantiated by fact than by moral fervor. He has failed, for example, to examine recent census studies on the measurement of poverty, findings from which would, in some respects, strengthen his case. Harrington knows as well as anyone that a determination of an accurate estimate of the scope of poverty is essential in the formulation of government policy. Blending, however, thin antecdotal material and poorly researched statistical data, he has produced a book that does not have the intellectual strength to back up his call for a radical shift of government policy toward the left. The dangerous lack of substantiation seriously damages his much larger cause, which is to build public support for full employment programs and adequate housing for everyone.

Politics in the United States has over the past decade become increasingly ideological, with conservatives demonstrating an astute ability to press for tax and spending policies redistributing income and wealth upwards. For a generation. Harrington has been an influential spokesman for the left, but when he makes hypothetical, tautological assertions such as, "If there were a new spirit abroad in the land that something could be done about poverty, the old idealism would reappear," he is only helping his adversaries.

WASHINGTON - Always re-WASHINGTON — Always remember that big oak trees start out 1987, when the NFL's five-year, The United States Football

ALBANY, New York — The letter from Melbourne, Australia, was addressed simply to "Jeff Blatnick, Gold Medal Winner, New York, America," but found its way into the bulging mailbox at Blatnick's home in Niskayuna, a suburb of Schenectady.

"Dear Jeff," it read. "Words cannot express how moved I was by your Olympic gold medal victory. As I watched you on TV, I knelt with you, I prayed with you and I cried...."
One from St. Paul, Minnesota, read: "I'm just

Spike Lanides. With Blatnick were several large envelopes stuffed with some of the nearly 700 letters and telegrams he has received from numerous countries and about half of the states in America since the night of August 2 when, before a worldwide television andience, he beat Thomas Johansson of Sweden in the heavyweight final. "All this," said Blatnick, smiling and nodding at the letters, "for just six minutes of sweating." When those six minutes were over, so was the denougment of a story that indeed gripped the imagination of many. Upon winning, Blatnick immediately dropped to his knees, crossed himself and cried. Still choked up, he said to a television interviewer, "I'm one happy dude."

Lanides had been a heavyweight finalist in the 1956 Olympic Graeco-Roman trials. "He wanted to keep his mental capacities," Lanides said. "He didn't want to change his routine and give in to the illnes." Blatnick, who had been on the 1980 Olympic team and was disappointed by the boycott, regained his strength, continued wrestling and made the 1984 squad. "I was so excited I couldn't sleep that night," he said.

"Besides," he said, raising his brows, "I cut a lot of onions practicing for it. "But what's happened since then is just amazing. I like it, and I'm glad if I can do something for people. But I wasn't prepared. It's going to take me a long time to answer all these letters.

I'm an amateur at this kind of stuff." He received lots of letters from people with Hodgkin's disease, or their relatives. The sister of such a victim wrote of Tony, age 17, from Indiana: "He came out of the operation very well, but no medicine that the hospital gave could match what your victory did for him. The sparkle came back into his eyes and, somewhat unfortunately, so did the sarcastic wit so characteristic of him. . . And from Virginia: "I have been battling Hodgkin's Disease also. You must know how the story goes. Mine has been: biopsy, one year of chemotherapy, six months of remission, relapse, second biopsy, laporotomy and radiation therapy. Presently I am waiting to hear what's next. But you brushed this disease aside, Jeff You've enabled me to form a mental picture of my future self as a strong, healthy and active wife and mother for a two-year-old. Thank you, Jeff, for winning that gold for me!"

Blatnick also heard from old friends and acquaintances. From a classmate at Niskayuna High School, where Blatnick was graduated in 1976: "You may not remember me. I was a freshman bass player when you were a sophomore and just starting to wrestle. You used to pick me up and twirl me and scare me to death. I like to think I was the first of many victims of your wrestling talents. It makes me proud to be from Niskayuna."

The American Cancer Society, the American Red Cross and various other charitable groups have written to ask him to speak, to contribute his time. And he will. He is also sifting offers from agents in regard to possible movie and book deals

As for his career, he is uncertain. He is a 27year-old bachelor and a graduate in physical education from Springfield College in Massacusetts. He has considered a future in coaching, of continuing as an amateur with sights on the 1988 Olympics, and is even pondering an offer to wrestle professionally. ("There's money there," he said of the latter, "and though I've never been very interested in money I wouldn't mind getting a comfortable financial base.")

Meanwhile, he knows he is being called a national hero. "I have to laugh at that," he said. "I mean, c'mon - I won a wrestling match. That's about it. I'm still a guy who flops around on a dirty mat. Maybe people's perceptions of

Harlem Seeks Tourists

By Richard Severo New York Times Service

New York Times Service

EW YORK — The Europeans were surprised at Harlem. Surprised, perhaps a little bewildered — and clearly delight-

They had no idea that lots of people were being encouraged to visit Harlem's restaurants, museums and churches; that Citibank had just made a $65,000 grant to get the newly formed Harlem Tourism Association going.

As far as the Europeans were concerned, Harlem is quite a tourist attraction already.

They indicated their appreciation of Harlem early, just after their Penny Sightseeing tour bus entered Harlem's southwest quadrant, moving along Convent Ауспис.

When Gabriele Mollo of Rome wasn't snapping pictures of the handsome facades, he was translating the narrative of the tour guide, Karen Thomas, for his wife, Luciana, who speaks no Enis one of the oldest, having begun its service in 1965 with a walking nounced it immediately became a murmur of "Collina di Zuc-ians say it. Italo Millone of Turin, said the houses reminded him of those in the Netherlands, but Mollo wondered, given all he had heard, if Sugar Hill — clean, prosperous, architecturally imposing — was "the most characteristic part of Harlem."

Even after the bus took the tourists past Harlem's well-publicized slum areas, Rachel Harir of Israel, said: "I'm astonished. I expected to see the poor buildings, but not the rest of it, not the way it is. I haven't seen such good buildings in Europe, and I didn't know Harlem contained so many fine churches and colleges."

Responses of this sort to tours of Harlem have been heard for years, and largely ignored by many New Yorkers, including many residents of Harlem.

But it would seem that tourism in Harlem has been steadily growing. Penny Sightseeing, one of several companies offering tours, Tourists cluster before Harlem row houses.

Penny Sightseeing runs three bus tours a week to Harlem be-tween May and October. The company estimates that in that period, it shows Harlem off to 30,000 people, many of them Europeans, some of them blacks from other states or the Caribbe-

The Uptown Chamber of Commerce, which looks out for Harlem's economic interests, thinks the tourism potential is enormous, according to its press spokesman, Peter Bailey, citing a recent study. The study was commissioned by the Federal Eco-nomic Development Administration and conducted by Bert Highet, a graduate student at the New School, working under the supervision of Walter Johnson, president of Quadrant, a Madison Avenue marketing consulting concern.

"Seventeen million people visit New York City every year," Johnson said. "If you could persuade just five percent of them to take side trips to Harlem - and that's a very conservative number you are talking about nearly a million visitors a year. And if those people spent $50 apiece, that would be $50 million in fresh money moving into Harlem each

From Johnson's point of view. what the association must do to achieve success is to establish a good visitor-reception center and to see to it that people who know the community are trained to es-cort tourists. Bailey said there already are plans to encourage guides to learn other languages.

The prospect of more tourism is being greeted hopefully in Harlem, especially among its business and cultural institutions.

At Sylvia's Restaurant. on Lenox Avenue, the manager, Bedelia Woods, estimated that more than half her customers come from areas other than Harlem, with many from Westchester County, Connecticut, New Jersey, Brooklyn and Staten Island.

At the Studio Museum on West 125th Street, about 5 percent of the visitors come from other countries, according to Mary Schmidt Campbell, the executive director.

Playing on cannon at Revolutionary War-era mansion.

Boys Choir of Harlem, Dillard Boone, said he was so optimistic about the possibilities offered by the development of tourism that he had recommended to a Harlem Week conference that a consortium of cultural organizations be established to "strategize and maximize" the benefits expected

Boone said he could envision visitors electing to take a tour between 2 P.M. and 3 P.M., having dinner in a Harlem restaurant and then attending a 7 P.M. con-from tourism.

Vivian Robinson, the director of the Audience Development Committee, an organization that disseminates information about black groups in the arts, predicted The managing director of the that Harlem's cultural organizations would have to become better organized to deal with the expected growth in tourism.

"We are talking about a structured tourism trade," she said. "Harlem's culture will no longer be just for people who get on the A train. We will be dealing with tour operators who book package tours three to six months in ad-

But will all that many tourists finally be attracted to Harlem?
"Harlem has a fabulous cachet internationally," said Johnson.

"People know its jazz, its choral groups. It has some of New York's best museums and it has the largest and best collection of brownstones in the world. It is better thought of abroad than it is in the United States."

Some Moderate Inflation of Deflation

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — Inflation, as we have been told a thousand times, is the cruelest tax of all. Inflation, goes the political-economic clické, steals your savings and hits hardest at the poor. Inflation is a word to be said with a frown; the only time a smile is permitted is when inflation is down.

Comes now deflation. How are we to react to this word? "After Years of Absence, Deflation Causes Worries," said The New York Times in a front-page headline, followed the next week by an editorial-page headline, "Deflation Can Also Hurt."

"The market appears to be getting more concerned about deflation than it was about inflation," said economist Gary Ciminero. "Recent indications of deflation include dividend cuts, salary freezes and OPEC's oil-price freeze, the dollar reaching new highs daily and sinking precious-metals prices."

"Members of the Fed talk of inflation when every market signal is warning of deflation," said Representative Jack Kemp, who wants the Federal Reserve Board to loosen money and thereby reduce interest rates, an action which some people fear would reignite inflation and abort the recovery. (Abort is as close to recovery as awash is to oil.)

The linguistic question is not how to define deflation, which is the contraction of the supply of money or credit that is followed by a decline in the prices of goods and services. The question is: Does deflation have a pejorative connotation? Is it something to be wished for or worried about?

Where you stand depends on where you sit. If you're a farmer or you own commodities like beans or you have been collecting gold bricks, deflation is a bummer. If you are a consumer and you have been watching the prices of the things you want to buy rocket up out of reach, then deflation is your big chance: The money you have is worth more. You should smile at the prospect of some deflation, provided the drop in real prices does not slow down the economy to the point that you lose your job.

The adjective used to make inflation fearsome is runaway, the adjective to wipe the smiles off the faces of consumers watching prices come down at long last has not been chosen yet, but the modifier for deflation is likely to be something like headlong, meaning "head-first" or "reckless"; academic types may prefer precipitate, meaning "sudden," or precipitous, if the image desired is "steep."

Politicians who want to appeal to both farmers and consumers will safely deplote both runaway inflation and headlong deflation. But what of those who like to be in favor of something? A little inflation or moderate deflation is unexciting; flation falls flat; and nonflation bas not yet been coined.

Try price stability. People stopped talking about that years ago; maybe it's due for a comeback.

A NEW note of pragmatism" has been observed in Democratic speeches of late, mainly by Republicans who have forgotten the vognishness of that word in the Kennedy era. The word is rooted in the Greek pragma, meaning "deed" or "business." In the Reagan White House, two camps have emerged in all foreign strategy and economic planning: the pragmatic camp vs. the principled camp. Pragmatists see the principle-peddlers as a pack of rigid ideologues, while principlians view the pragmatists as a sanhedrin of sellout artists with a weather vane for a moral compass.

mint. Is

Among the Republican pragmatists are Chief of Staff James Baker, Deputy Chief Michael Deaver and iminence grise Richard Darman; all are leaning now toward the principled supply-side economics, and their conversion is derided by old ideologues as an open staff and their conversion is derided by old ideologues as an open staff and their conversion. example of pragmatists going with principle when the wind shifts that way. Democratic pragmatists include Walter Mondale, who told delegates. "We know that government must be as well managed as it is well meaning."

The man who established pragmatism in American thought was William James. The foremost expert on that philosopher is Jacques Barzun, the usagist who wrote "A Stroll With William James." Here is Barzun on pragmatism:

"Pragmatism is not a philosophy but an attempt to explain how the mind ascertains truth. If correct, the explanation supplies a means of testing truths. The pragmatic test, as it is called, consists in seeing whether an idea, a hypothesis or even a mere hunch is borne out by the concrete experiences that occur when one acts on the given hunch or hypothesis. In simplest form, if one thinks the umbrella has been left in the kitchen, one must go to the kitchen in order to find it or fail to find it. The proof is by consequences.

"In more complex matters - in science or ethics or social policy—the test must be based on a very large number of consequences, including careful compari-son with truths previously established. The pragmatic question always is: If this is indeed true, what will follow — in life, thought, feeling and our earlier stock of knowledge?

"As commonly minused, pragmatism stands for the exact opposite of what William James intended it to mean. It stands for rough-and-ready methods of pushing things through, regardless of consequences, or again, it is used for readiness to compromise instead of sticking to one's principles. These attitudes are so common and obvious that it is a pity to debase for their description a term which is important in the history of thought."

PEOPLE are worried about pronunciation — other people's, usually. Karen Rosenberg, who describes herself as a physical anthropologist, writes from the University of Michigan about the frequent mispronunciation of dissect. "Most people pronounce it with a long i," to rhyme with bisect, she points out. Both share the same Latin root, secure, meaning "to cut." but while bi-sect means "to cut in two," dis-sect means "to cut apart." Confusion over the meanings may have led to confusion over the pronunciation: Dissect is pronounced with a short i.

I have been mispronouncing that word ever since we dissected those poor frogs in the biology lab of the Bronx High School of Science. So why not go on mispronouncing it - won't common usage cover me? The answer is no: In that case, dissect loses all meaning when it thymes with bisect.
